

GEORGE KALLELY

INFORMATION & COMMUNICATIONS TECHNOLOGY (ICT) INTERN

"My internship gave me early experience into what an office was, and connected me with other people in IT and work. I came in when they came in, I left when they left, and I had lunch with them. As an experience it was very professional and showed me what an office place usually looked like."

"My ICT internship was at a transportation company. It wasn't the business of building computers, but it was helping others in a business meet their requirements by using computers. Every company these days needs to be connected to the internet. We worked on the technology required to maintain and support the main business. A lot of what we did was working with people and the computers that they use on a daily basis. You go in thinking you are going to just learn computers skills, but people skills and public speaking are things you learn a lot about. What I wanted to look at for my career has been reinforced by my internship, and I know this is a field I would like to continue to work in."
